Dr Panos FITSILIS

Professor at University of Applied Sciences of Thessaly, School of Business and Economics, Greece

Professor Panos Fitsilis is full Professor at University of Applied Sciences of Thessaly (UAST), School of Business and Economics, Greece and Visiting Professor at Innopolis University, Kazan, Russian Federation. Prof. P. Fitsilis has extensive project management experience with the development and deployment of large IT systems and extensive management experience in various senior management positions such as: Director of School of Business and Economics at UAST, Vice President of UAST Research Committee, Head of Project Management department at UAST, Head of Business Unit at Intrasoft International, an international IT company, etc.

In his work as Business Unit manager at Intrasoft International he was responsible for the development, deployment and operation of a number of prestigious IT systems for European Commission, (CORDIS, and Electronic Proposal Submission System - EPSS), European Parliament, European Central Bank, etc.

Further, he has worked in more than 50 research or commercial projects, in various roles. He is the author of four books: "Contemporary Business Information Systems", "A practical guide to entrepreneurship – case studies", "Software Project Management", "Object Oriented Development using UML" and author of approximately 100 papers published at scientific journals and international conferences. His research interests include Project Management, Smart Cities, Entrepreneurship and Innovation, Software Engineering, Business Information Systems, Social Network Applications, etc.

Further, currently, he is Director of Research Laboratory «Business Information Systems and eCommerce, Member of working group for «Smart and Viable Cities» at Hellenic Standardization Organization ELOT and Member of Regional Board for «Research and Innovation» for the Region of Sterea Ellada, Greece.